

Health Sector Competencies

Competency Areas

Below you will find the general assessment of your natural potential and your current approach (adaptation) of behaviours related to the 4 key competency areas. This assessment is NOT an assessment of your competency performance in each area, but your Natural valuation represents your instinctive or natural potential to show or develop that competency area more easily, i.e. your performance or development requires less additional effort. Your Adapted valuation represents where you are investing your energy or where you perceive that you should invest it for successful performance in that area. Anything over 50% requires little effort, anything under 50% requires a little more effort.

Keep in mind that no one scores high in all areas but we must take into consideration those areas that have to do with our activity or job.

Key Behavioral Competencies

Below you will find the assessment of your NATURAL potential and your current focus (ADAPTATION) on key competencies in the health sector based on WHO recommendations. This assessment is NOT an assessment of your competency performance in each competency, but your NATURAL assessment represents your instinctive or natural potential to show or develop that competency more easily, i.e. your performance or development takes less additional effort. Your ADAPTADA assessment represents where you are investing your energy or where you perceive that you should invest it for successful performance in that area.

Anything above 50% means little effort, the higher the percentage, the lower the effort. What is below 50% means a little more effort, the lower the percentage, the greater the effort but in no case does it limit how you can develop or have developed those competences if you have worked on them, since this is not what we measure.

KEY "PATIENT SAFETY" COMPETENCIES

You should look at those that are key to your position or activity and ignore the rest.

KEY "OPERATIONAL" COMPETENCIES OF THE HEALTH SECTOR

You should look at those that are key to your position or activity and ignore the rest.
